GUIDANCE NOTES & DEFINITIONS

Bona Fide Subcontractor or Labour Only Subcontractor?

Does the Subcontractor work under your supervision?

Do you supply the materials they use?

Are they paid on production of an invoice for their labour only?

If the answer is yes to any of these questions this is a good indicator that the Subcontractor is labour only and therefore needs to be covered by Employers' Liability and Public liability. Even if a LOSC carries their own insurance, the principal (the proposer) will be held responsible for them whilst under their control.

Where BFSC are used, you must determine the number of site supervisors, wage roll and the number of sites operated at any one time. This will provide a good indicator of the levels of control and supervision the proposer has on site.

Subsidiary & Associated Companies

Under the regulations Subsidiary Companies can be grouped together and regarded as one Employer and share the same policy, taking a share of the cover. This is not true of Associated Companies. They cannot be grouped together and for that reason they must arrange individual insurance cover to ensure that they have at least the minimum amount of employers liability cover as specified in the regulations (ie £5m each).

A subsidiary company is a company that is owned or controlled by another company, which is called the parent company or holding company which;

- (a) holds a majority of the voting rights in it, or
- (b) is a member of it and has the right to appoint or remove a majority of its board of directors, or
- (c) is a member of it and controls alone, pursuant to an agreement with other members, a majority of the voting rights in it

Heat equipment is defined as electric, oxy-acetylene or similar welding or cutting equipment, cutting or grinding equipment using abrasive disks or wheels, blow lamps, blow torches, hot air guns or hot air strippers or asphalt, bitumen, tar or pitch heaters used away from premises You own, hire or rent.
